Ok, took a bunch and left out some stuff. Let me know if there are parts of his edits you want. Im open to considering. Also, changed the title back...the last one just wasn't working for me.

Basic structure and argument is great. I know it looks like a lot of red ink but I really just tried to finesse, clarify, etc.

I think it's critical to explain the difference between the regulation the FCC could issue now and the way the Internet is policed today which is "regulation" of a very different sort -- and not what most people think of when they use that term.
